East Valley Water District is Recognized as an Inland Empire Top Workplace

The District has been awarded a Top Workplace status for the seventh consecutive year by creating a positive and transparent work environment.

Highland, Calif., (February 1, 2022) – East Valley Water District received the Inland News Group Top Workplace Award on January 30, 2022, in recognition of its people-centered organization. The award showcases the District’s efforts to maintain a positive work environment, fulfilling East Valley Water District’s vision to serve the community, even throughout the global pandemic. This recognition is the District’s seventh year receiving the award as leadership continues to focus on building a positive organization focused on employee development and retention.

“East Valley Water District embraced a world-class standard of service towards our community; we know a positive workforce will further the District’s mission and create a place where people want to work,” said Board Chairman Phillip R. Goodrich. “Receiving the award, for the seventh time, showcases leadership’s desire to not only recruit top candidates, but develop employees and promote active dialog throughout the organization.” The District has taken steps to create a supportive environment that encourages employees to better serve the community through professional growth, development, and training.

The Top Workplace award is based upon anonymous employee feedback on topics such as management, work environment, job satisfaction and social responsibility. For award evaluation, the District received 100% employee participation on the voluntary employee engagement survey.

“Many organizations will say ‘employees are the most valued resource’ but East Valley Water District turns this statement into action,” commented John Mura, General Manager/CEO. “The District is proud to be recognized as a workplace built on trust, community and accountability. When we love our job, we work with an increased dedication to achieve goals and provide our community with the best possible service.”

Through the District’s succession planning efforts, several positions across East Valley Water District will open over the upcoming year. For information about East Valley Water District, including the latest job opportunities, visit eastvalley.org.
